Croup

"I don't think there is a more anxious time for parents than when their children have croup. Without their being prepared with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy they must wait for the doctor and listen to the choking, metallic cough and watch their little one gasping for breath.

You know the great danger of croup is the formation of a false membrane in the larynx, and until this is expelled relief cannot be obtained, and the spasmodic choking continues. Give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in frequent doses. It will loosen this membrane and cause the child to expel it by vomiting.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is an absolutely safe and certain remedy for croup, and if given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack."

BROTHERHOOD

Our Weakness Brought to Light—The Outlook for Universal Brotherhood Is Not Very Promising at Present—The Obstructions Which Must Be Removed—The Foundation of Brotherhood Is the Will of God.

Many times of late we have heard about certain things breaking down, and one of them, we have been told with strong emphasis, is the brotherhood of man. The European war has brought to light our weakness, and instead of being found equal to the strain of our day, we have been found wanting and surprisingly frail. At this discovery we are ourselves astonished as well as every else. We were not so far advanced as we thought we were. We were not so firmly fixed in the path of brotherhood as we believed we were. The savage of our nature was closer to the surface than we thought it was. There was a certain animosity, a jealousy, a certain greed, lurking in some corner of our souls which we were not aware of. Our personal investigation of our own nature had not been done with sufficient care. We were ignorant of their existence—the powers that destroy—and when the hour of trial struck, we were swept from our feet by a torrent which we have every reason to call the torrent of hate. Instead of being brotherly, we were in reality hateful. Instead of being ready to help, we were prepared to destroy; and now the world is in the grip of the despair that savagery breeds. The animal of our nature has forced himself to the forefront of our lives, and we thought that he had been slain, and the atmosphere we breathe is the atmosphere of malignity. Surely, then, as we have been told many times, the brotherhood of man has failed to prove its efficacy. It is still only the beautiful dream of the past.

This is not all. While we realize that the European war is a big, black spot on our civilization, yet it is by no means all of our troubles. There are other troubles which are very detrimental to our well-being, and every one of them speaks directly against brotherhood. Their testimonies are pregnant with meaning. From their point of view, the world is not at all promising. The labor world is agitated from its center to its circumference. The financial world is disturbed to its very bottom. Capital and labor are at the throat of each other. The social world is in the grip of one contention after the other, and the religious world is no better. Discontent and dissension are the rulers of the earth, and looking in the direction of these dominions, we are certainly not encouraged to believe in the brotherhood of man. It is easier for us to believe in will and avarice. It is easier for us to believe that the purpose of man's life is to rob, plunder and kill than to believe that he has been appointed to be a brother. In accordance with the signs we are discouraged to believe that he has been appointed to be helpful, considerate and kind. To believe that he was made to be many in his manner is almost too much for us.

The other day a leader in the ranks of labor testified before a committee in court that the day had arrived when workmen should take over to themselves all things belonging to their occupation, could it be that they could not do this without fighting, they were justified in fighting. They had suffered long enough, and their circumstances were no better now than years ago. It was still a day of age for the laboring man, and revolution was the only avenue open to him for amelioration. He should rise, therefore, and demand his own.

On the same day, before the same court, a representative of the financial world said that the tyranny of unionism was so great and bitter that there was nothing for the employer to do save fight. They had no choice in the matter. Trade unionism was forcing the employers of the land to the battlefield, and they were ready for the fray. If the employees were ready for revolution, revolution they would have. The employers were not going to put up with their despotism any longer. They had suffered long enough, and they were resolved to suffer no longer.

Turning now to the social world, and what do we see there? Do we see much to encourage us to believe in the brotherhood of man? Rather, we see a great deal to discourage us. The classes, and we to the one that we are obliged to remain within his well-measured lines. The bitterness and the jealousy are rampant and contented. There is no feeling of fraternity there. The lines are drawn and established without showing a grain of sympathy, and the struggle for position goes on. One class is held in contempt by the other, and to consider the idea of brotherhood is out of the question. The world has no dealings with the Samaritans. These words are fully as modern as when they were uttered first of all. They are in truth very fitting to us. They are not ancient at all, and if they had been spoken purposely for us, they could not have been truer to the spirit of the social world of our age.

Glancing again at the religious world, and instead of seeing harmony reigning supreme in the midst of it, according to our fair expectation, we see it very much like the world which we have already seen. The stupid striving is there, and so is the rank and deep-seated bitterness. Jealousy shows its teeth on every corner, and while we believe that this domain is better and purer than any other domain, yet we are far from believing that it is a brotherhood to the extent that ought to be. It is not up to the standard of our desires. The battle of doctrine is still fought, and this or that method is still denounced simply because it is not the method of this or that class. Whatever defense we are willing to make in behalf of the religious world, there is no denying the fact that it is as yet, league on league, below the grand ideal—the brotherhood of man. There are many things in its bosom which are contrary to the welfare of the race.

But before giving up our quest, we must consult another source. Thus far we have failed to find very much that is worth while. We have been disappointed in the religious world, and common that we must reason and argue too laboriously before we can see the good acts of brotherhood. The light is so heavy and deep that it is difficult for us to separate the wholesome from the unwholesome. But we have one source left, and we feel assured that from it we shall receive the light which we need. We believe in the brotherhood of man, and we know that the world is in need of it. We believe, in its potency, and we know that it is the remedy which the world must have. There is not anything in existence that can take this place. Strife, jealousy, contention, bitterness, cannot be maintained in its atmosphere, and nothing else can do so much for us. It is a power that can clear the heavens of all sorts of clouds, giving an opportunity to the sun—even the Sun of Righteousness—to pour its healing rays upon us. This is our need, and without it, the human race, nor its God, will not be satisfied.

Saint Paul in his letter to the Roman Christians wrote the following words: "For whom whom God has chosen beforehand He has also predestined to bear the likeness of His Son, that He might be the Eldest in a vast family of brothers." These words are pointed and full of meaning. Their significance is our anchor. By it we are made steady and firm, and without it we have no hope in the world. The Man from Nazareth is the central fact of life, having in Him every quality of brotherhood, and in Him the vast family of brothers is to be created. This is the will of our Father, and the fact that it is the will of our Father, is all-sufficient. Our disappointment has become hope. Our discouragement has become inspiration, for we can quote the words of John Steward Mill. "Whatever else may be taken from us by rational criticism, Christ is still left a unique figure, not more unlike all His precursors than all His followers; a Divine person, a standard of excellence and a model for imitation; available even to the lowliest of men, and never lost to humanity." At last, we have found the anchor of our souls, the anchor of brotherhood—Jesus Christ crucified. He is the Son of God, and He is the Son of man. From time to time we have heard a great deal concerning foreordination, but we have never heard of foreknowledge, but the modern word for it is evolution; and in this we see what God has planned for us to be. It has been planned for the evolution of men to develop into a brotherhood in the Man from Nazareth—the Christ and our Redeemer. He is the foundation of the vast family of brothers, and He is the Son of God, and He is the Son of man. The test of the ages has failed to find Him wanting in any fashion. He is harmony incarnate, having the exquisite balance of the passive and the active. "He is indignant, but never boisterous; tender, but never weak; firm but never obstinate; condescending, but never familiar." He is the soul-appraiser of all things, and we can successfully disprove it, our moral constitution must be changed. We must be created along other lines from their point of view. The Son of God—aside. In Him we find ourselves.

Then, we have found our basis and our anchor. We know that the edifice of brotherhood is incomplete, nevertheless, we also know that it will be completed without fail. We know that such will be the case because such a foundation would not have been laid to fail. The Desire of the Nations is at the core of our souls, ready to permeate all our thoughts and feelings, and He has been waiting for us to be brothers, and this is enough to make us know that the task which the task will be accomplished.

What he has designed will be perfected. He is the master architect of the building of brotherhood, and the jealousy, the bitterness, which we now see in us and around us, are doomed to destruction. God will be in us fully in these last days through His Son.
